As the flora comes alive and I remember my grandmother's enthusiasm for God's amazing creation, I am also drawn to the mighty power of God in recreating the human spirit.

My grandmother loved to garden, and tulips were one of her favorites. Since they bloomed early in spring, she got really excited for the growing year ahead as those tulips burst forth in beauty and color. She didn't seem to give much concern over the forgotten dead stalks of the previous winter, but took joy in rebirth as the new season blossomed.

Another spring is upon us. As the flora comes alive and I remember her enthusiasm for God's amazing creation, I also am drawn to the mighty power of God in recreating the human spirit.

The scriptures teach, "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; old things have passed away; behold, all things have become new" (2 Corinthians 5:17).

When we see a new Christian being born (John 3:5; Gal. 3:27), we should not allow our minds to linger too long on the "old man" that was buried (Rom. 6:6). Instead, we should magnify and praise our God who has the power to regenerate the human soul (Titus 3:5). The bright outlook and beautiful spirit that comes up from the waters of baptism is a testament to the God who saves through the blood of His blessed Son Jesus the Christ!

Thanks be to God for His indescribable gift!

The Nature in Divine Communication

(Part 2)

By Daniel Gaines | WBS OCEAN BRIDGE ENVOY

He wants us to linger over the words, and to wrestle with them. Such is the intention behind the biblical concept of meditation. Scriptures should be savored slowly like a hard candy, not munched thoughtlessly like a handful of popcorn. As we study, we can marvel at the harmony across pages that span centuries.

“The Bibles communication is not intended to be detached from relationship and relationship requires time, listening and growth.”

The lazy technique of plucking a single verse out of its home and pressing it into service for our own preferences is not the path of true understanding and can so easily lead us astray. Every verse is true; every verse is authoritative; but no verse is complete in isolation. The good Bible student must give Scripture a patient, disciplined hearing: book beside book, covenant beside covenant, prophesy beside fulfillment. We should receive the Scripture as God passed it down to us, rich, layered and remarkably unified.

Some people stumble over the Bible's complexity. Why not a simple manual? Why not a comprehensive reference manual with a handy FAQ section? Why a sprawling library gathered across centuries? While that might sound appealing, it misunderstands how God chooses to communicate. He does not just give us information alone. He gives us Himself. The Bible's communication is not intended to be detached from relationship. And relationship requires time, listening and growth. A manual can be skimmed; the Bible must be lived.

To handle Scripture carelessly is to treat God's voice lightly. To handle it rightly is to open ourselves to transformation. When Paul stated in 2 Timothy 3:16 that “all Scripture is inspired by God and profitable,” he was declaring that every page, every genealogy, every oracle, every prayer, every thought, was breathed by God and shapes His people for His purposes.

The Bible is not merely ancient histories. It is divine communication relevant to you and me. Its truths are not locked in the past. They are alive, wandering into our daily activities, challenging our assumptions, comforting our griefs, and calling us to holiness. When we study Scripture with its languages, its genres, and its contexts, we are not performing academic exercises. We are learning to hear our Father's voice more clearly.

Yes, God has spoken. His revelation is complete; His message is trustworthy; His voice is steady across every page. And when we open the Bible, we step into the long conversation between God and His people. It is a conversation that still changes lives, still shapes His church, and still speaks with divine authority. So let us come to the Scriptures with reverence and expectation. Let us handle its library with care. Let us study, wrestle, pray, and rejoice in its pages. For in the Bible, God speaks to you.
